Sustainability: 3 case studies

How wineries in Italy, Spain and Australia are improving their carbon footprints, increasing biodiversity, and saving energy...

Albino Armani is committed to saving Trentino's indigenous grapes

Example 1: Albino Armani Winery, northern Italy

Respect for the land and local community are important pillars at the Albino Armani Winery, which now spans more than 220ha in the regions of Trentino Alto Adige, Veneto, and Friuli-Venezia Giulia in northern Italy.

Named Great Wine Capitals' 2021 Global Best of Wine Tourism Winner in the category of Sustainable Wine Tourism Practices, the Albino Armani Winery aims to tie these pillars to high-quality wine production.

Although best-known for his Pinot Grigios, Proseccos and Amarone, Albino Armani and wife Egle (above) are keen to save ancient grapevines and forgotten wine flavours, and have been researching and investing in ancient and endangered Italian grape varieties since the 1980s.

Albino, whose family's winemaking legacy goes back to 1607, established the Conservatoria, a small-scale experimental vineyard at Dolcè in 2003 and, along with the Istituto di San Michele all'Adige, is credited with rescuing from extinction 25 native varieties of Trentino and putting 10 back on the National Registry of native varieties of Italy.
